The Philadelphia Times says: "When minor league managers are hunting tal-ent for the teams for the 1911 season they might do well to turn to the amateur and semi-professional clubs in Philadelphia. These clubs, where the youngsters are given every chance to make good and learn the rudiments of inside baseball, flourish in Philadelphia and surrounding ipall towns. Because two major league clubs have homes in Philadelphia it does not follow that the amateurs and semipros do not furnish a first-class quality of the national pastime. In the Saturday afternoon games play equally as good as that at Shibe Park and the Phillies' park is seen at times. Several players who have enrolled their names on the baseball hall of fame have learned to play in these series, and more will come from them.
